“Right-To-Ride” Legislation

Introduction

Many who enjoy recreational riding on public lands are concerned about the reduction of trails, trail heads and the closure of public lands to horses and pack animals. Access to areas to ride is one of the most important issues facing riders. To prevent further closures, recreational riders are working closely with their federal, state and local land managers and also looking for federal legislative solutions.

House Legislation

Representative George Radanovich (R-CA) reintroduced his “Right-to-Ride” bill (H.R. 586) in the House of Representatives in the first session of this Congress. The bill is intended to preserve the use and access of pack and saddle stock animals on public lands, wilderness areas, national monuments, and other areas that are administered by the National Park Service, the Bureau of Land Management, the United States Fish and Wildlife Service, or the Forest Service where there is a historical tradition of such use.

Specifically the legislation mandates that the lands should be managed by the federal agencies “to preserve and facilitate the continued use and access of pack and saddle stock animals on such lands, including wilderness areas, national monuments, and other specifically designated areas, where there is a historical tradition of such use.”

In addition, the legislation requires that “as a general rule, all trails, routes, and areas used by pack and saddle stock shall remain open and accessible for such use.”

The House bill was referred to both the House Resources Committee and the House Agriculture Committee.

Senate Legislation

On April 14, 2005 Senator Mike Crapo (R-ID) introduced a companion “Right-to-Ride” bill (S. 781) in the Senate. It is the same as the House bill.

The Senate bill has been referred to the Senate Energy and Natural Resources Committee.

Congressional Action

On May 16, the House of Representatives passed Congressman George Radanovich’s “Right-to-Ride” bill (H.R. 586).

During the House debate, Congressman Radanovich stated that “perhaps no other activity is more synonymous with the exploration of our vast open lands than that of the use of pack and saddle stock.” In response to the argument that this bill singles out pack and saddle use and affords it greater consideration than other forms of recreation or commercial use, Mr. Radanovich argued that “pack and saddle use has played a far greater historic role on our public lands, particularly in our western states, than simply recreation. What may be perceived by some today as recreation was once a vital part of everyday living throughout our Nation’s history.”

The bill was sent to the Senate and referred to the Energy and Natural Resources Committee, the Committee that has jurisdiction over the Senate bill.

AHC Position

The AHC supports this legislation and asks all recreational riders to contact their Senators encouraging them to act on it in the Senate.

Wild Horse and Burro Legislation

Introduction

The wild horse and burro issue has perplexed the various interests involved in it for years. The herds have been managed by the Bureau of Land Management (BLM) since passage of the 1971 legislation protecting them. To some they are a part of the “American heritage.” To others they overbreed and compete with other livestock and animals for forage and water on federal lands.

BLM has offered these horses for adoption for years under their Adopt-a-Wild Horse program. But herd sizes continue to grow faster than the excess horses are adopted and BLM maintains it has not been able to bring the herds down to manageable levels. There are now an estimated 24,000 animals in holding facilities costing $495 per animal per year.

Background

In the 108th Congress, Senator Conrad Burns (R-MT) and others included a provision in the Omnibus Appropriations Bill repealing the prohibition on the sale of wild horses and burros for commercial purposes and authorizing the Secretary of Interior to sell excess animals at public sales “without limitation” on their use. Excess horses are deemed to be those over ten years of age and those that have not been adopted in three attempts. BLM has estimated that approximately 8,400 animals fall in those categories. Many are concerned that such animals could go to slaughter.

House Legislation

On January 5, 2007, Congressman Nick Rahall (D-WV) and Congressman Ed Whitfield (R-KY) introduced H.R. 249, which would restore the prohibition on the commercial sale and slaughter of wild free-roaming horses and burros. This bill amends the Wild Free-Roaming Horses and Burros Act of 1971(Public Law 92-195). Congressman Rahall introduced similar legislation in the last Congress.

H.R. 249 was referred to the House Committee on Natural Resources.

AHC Position

The AHC does not have a position on this legislation at this time.

Federal Legislation On Animal Identification

Introduction

The livestock industry has been debating the issues surrounding the institution of a national animal identification (ID) system to address animal health emergencies for over a decade.

On April 27, 2004, former Secretary of Agriculture Ann M. Veneman expressed full support of a national ID system, now called the National Animal Identification System (NAIS), and announced the framework for implementation of such a system. Congress supports this initiative as shown by the legislation that has been introduced in the last Congress and this Congress calling for its implementation.

The NAIS is intended to establish a standardized, alphanumeric system for the identification of livestock and the premises where livestock are kept or commingled. The purpose of such a system is to permit "trace back" within 48 hours of a confirmed diagnosis of an animal disease outbreak.

In the fall of 2003, the American Horse Council organized a task force, which included nearly thirty equine organizations, to evaluate the NAIS and determine if the horse industry might develop standards for equine identification that would benefit the industry and be compatible with such a system should it become mandatory. This Task Force has now been recognized as the Equine Species Working Group (ESWG) by USDA. Through the ESWG, the horse industry is evaluating the NAIS, its potential benefits and costs to the horse industry, and determining how the industry can develop standards for equine identification that would fit into it.

Federal Legislation

Several bills have been introduced regarding the National Animal Identification System.

The National Farm Animal Identification Records Act (H.R. 1254) Congressman Collin Peterson (D-MN) introduced this bill. It directs the Secretary of Agriculture to establish a nationwide electronic livestock identification system that will enable USDA to enhance the speed and accuracy of the response to outbreaks of disease in livestock. The system would apply to "all livestock born in the United States or imported" and "cover the movement of livestock in both interstate commerce and intrastate commerce." Under the legislation, the system must be capable of tracing livestock from birth to slaughter within 48 hours of an outbreak.

The bill includes specific language exempting the information obtained pursuant to the system from disclosure under the Freedom of Information Act (FOIA) and provides that information obtained shall be considered "commercial information that is privileged and confidential" and not considered "information in the public domain."

The information could be released by the Secretary only in the case of an animal disease outbreak and only to stated federal and state officials with a need to know the information for disease control. Even then it may be released only if the information involves livestock threatened by disease, the release is related to actions under the system and the person obtaining the information needs it for public health and safety reasons pursuant to the NAIS.

Access to information collected through a national system and an exemption from disclosure under FOIA has been a concern expressed by the equine industry through the Equine Species Working Group.

The bill authorizes $175 million to set up the ID system and requires the Secretary to provide financial assistance to producers in complying with the requirements of the system, particularly smaller livestock producers, who are not to be placed at a financial disadvantage in complying with the requirements.

The bill amends the Animal Health Protection Act, which was passed to clarify and strengthen the USDA's authority to prevent, control and eradicate animal diseases. Under that Act, "animal" is defined to include "all farm-raised animals," including horses. fit within that definition.

Congressman Peterson has also introduced a second bill (H.R. 1256) that simply provides protection from disclosure under the Freedom of Information Act of any information obtained through a livestock identification system developed by the Secretary of Agriculture. The provisions in this bill are identical to the FOIA protections described above in the broader bill introduced by Mr. Peterson.

The Livestock Identification and Marketing Opportunities (LIMO) Act (H.R. 3170). On June 30, Representative Steve King (R-IA) introduced another bill calling for the establishment of a national identification system for livestock. This was shortly after a second case of BSE was found in the U.S.

The bill calls for the implementation of such a national livestock identification system by 2009.

Participation in the system called for by this bill would be mandatory for "livestock," which is defined to mean "cattle, swine, sheep, goats and poultry," but does not include horses. Owners/producers of other livestock, such as horses, could participate in the system, but it would be voluntary.

This legislation would establish a private Livestock Identification Board to develop and maintain the livestock identification system. The system would be producer-controlled and run by stakeholders in the livestock industries involved. The Board would consist of seven voting members appointed by the Secretary of Agriculture in consultation with the Chair and ranking minority member of the relevant congressional committees, presumably the House and Senate Agriculture Committees. The voting members of the Board would be one representative from each of the cattle, swine, sheep and goat industries, poultry producers, livestock market operators, meat processors and one at-large member. Non-voting representatives on the Board would be from the USDA and State or tribal agriculture agencies. This Board would have to make periodic reports to the Secretary and the congressional committees with oversight authority.

Under the bill, the livestock identification system must be capable of tracing all livestock “from the time of first movement ... from its original premise to the time of slaughter... in less than 48 hours.” It must also be able to track all relevant information about the livestock, including its identification number, the date the number was assigned, the premise identification number, the species, date of birth, sex and any other information the Board considers appropriate.

The Board would also be required to maintain the identification system in a centralized data system and determine the official identification technology to be used to track animals.

Within nine months after enactment, the bill requires the Secretary to establish a premise identification system for all premises in the U.S. Premise is defined as “a location that holds, manages, or boards animals. [Note: It is not clear whether “animal” includes horses and whether locations that hold horses are premises but presumably they are because of state requirements.] Information required includes the premise identification number, the entity that owns or controls the premise, contact information, the type of operation and the date the premise number was assigned.

In addition, under the King bill, livestock and premises information collected for the system will be exempted by law from the Freedom of Information Act. It also imposes other restrictions on the release of information, primarily limiting its release only in the case of a disease threat and only to those involved in handling such a threat.

Enforcement lies with the USDA, but there are no provisions for civil or criminal penalties. If the Secretary finds an animal is not identified he/she could require identification prior to its being moved. If an owner of livestock not covered by the legislation, such as horses, voluntarily subjects his animal to the identification system, he still would not be subject to USDA enforcement.

The bill authorizes $33 million to be appropriated for Fiscal Years 2006 through 2008 for implementation of the identification system.

Congressional Action

All of the bills have been referred to the House Agriculture Committee. No hearings have been scheduled yet.

AHC Position

The AHC will be guided by the Equine Species Working Group regarding positions on these bills and other federal legislation that may be introduced on identification.

Animal Enterprise Protection Act

Introduction

In 1992, Congress passed the “Animal Enterprise Protection Act.” This law makes it a federal crime to steal animals, damage property, or generally disrupt activities involving animals, including rodeos, horse shows and other equine competitions. The AHC was a major supporter of the legislation and worked hard along with other industry groups to make sure that the final legislation protected horse events.

Senate Legislation

On October 27, 2005, Senator James Inhofe (R-OK) introduced the “Animal Enterprise Terrorism Act of 2005” (S.1926), which updates the 1992 law. The bill expands the authority of the Department of Justice to deal with the recent trends in the animal rights terrorist movements.

Animal rights terrorists have apparently changed their activities to take advantage of the ambiguities in the present statute. This has made investigations and prosecutions more difficult. This legislation would broaden present law (1) to protect not only property that is connected with an animal enterprise but also a supplier and its property from intentional actions and damage by animal rights terrorists; (2) to prohibit threats and injury to employees, individuals and families involved with animal enterprises and increase the penalties for intentionally causing a person physical or economic harm; and (3) to expand the protections to include commercial enterprises that use or sell animals or animal products, including animal shelters, breeders, pet stores and furriers.

The Senate bill was referred to the Judiciary Committee.

House Legislation

On November 4, 2005, Representative Tom Petri (R-WI) introduced companion legislation in the House (H.R. 4239). The bill was referred to the House Judiciary Committee.

On May 23, 2006, the House Judiciary Subcommittee on Crime, Terrorism and Homeland Security held a hearing on this bill. There were several witnesses, including a representative of the Department of Justice who testified that the Department supported the bill. He stated that the Department considered animal rights terrorists to be very dangerous and noted that these individuals had changed their destructive activities and were using different forms of intimidation specifically to avoid the prohibitions of the current law. He said that the changes called for in this bill would update the current law to make it clear that it applies to the recent trends in animal rights extremism. He testified that it would enhance the Department’s ability to respond to the new domestic threats.

Congressional Action

On September 30, 2006, the Senate passed the bill by unanimous consent. On November 13, the House passed the bill under suspension of the rules. The President signed it into law on November 27, 2006.

AHC Position

The AHC supported this legislation.

Carol Ann Russack

Carol Ann Russack, the long time owner of the Huntington Saddlery, passed onto Cowgirl Heaven, all too soon of a brain tumor, on December 27th, 2006. She was a well known member of the horse community. Her relaxed and informal manner was reflected in the way in which she operated her establishment. Though it was at times a challenge to find a particular item in her well stocked English and Western inventory, Carol was inevitably available to help the customer. She was always ready to special order an item if it was not in stock, as well as to sell a saddle on consignment, and to fit a saddle for a customer's horse. A horse owner and rider herself, Carol also functioned as a judge at Western horse shows.

Her caring attitude was reflected in her regard and concern for animals of all classes. It was not unusual for there to be baby raccoon she had rescued, in a box behind the counter in the store. She was in frequent touch with the North Shore Animal League offering her help and trying to learn as much as she could about animal issues.

We have lost a truly caring, compassionate and valuable member of the horse community and her passing has left emptiness in all of us.

Lou Saglembeni

Lou Saglembeni, a former member of the Nassau Suffolk Horsemen's Association Board of Directors and a Rough Rider Trooper on extended leave passed away on January 8th, 2007 after a long and courageous battle with cancer.

Lou was an active member of the board, who with a ready smile and a friendly greeting, could be depended upon to pitch in and help out when it was needed. Though involved with most of the events, his ready presence was experienced by me particularly at Swap Night. After bringing in his somewhat unique donations for the chinese auction, often plumbing fixtures e.g. fancy faucets and sinks; his strong and commanding presence was felt throughout the event. He was ever ready to step in to help wherever he was needed.

We often rode along side each other in parades as Rough Riders, and he could depended upon in his jocular manner to toss out Yiddish expressions, to lighten the mood. Paradoxically, at times I had no clue as to what this Italian guy was saying. In the early years of the Rough Rider Troop, after our drill at Blydenburg Park, Lou, Valentina and I would go on a trail ride crashing and dashing through the woods, he on his big draft horse.

So in essence, Lou was a big, warm, friendly fun loving man who could always be counted on to be there for the other person. He loved to eat, he loved to ride and he loved to laugh. Lou loved life and he will be sorely missed by those he touched as he goes off to Fiddlers Green.

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

January 4, 2007

American Horse Council Announces Congressional Cavalry Program

Washington, D.C. -The American Horse Council (AHC) and member organizations are initiating "The Congressional Cavalry Program," a new direct grassroots effort, to better represent and serve the horse industry in Washington, DC.

The purpose of the program is to identify at least one member of participating organizations in each Congressional District across America who will agree to contact his/her Representative/Senator or other federal officials when asked.

AHC member organizations represent all segments of the horse industry.

"If we can involve just one member in these organizations in each Congressional district across the country in the grassroots effort," said AHC President Jay Hickey, "think of the potential effect that could have when contacting Representatives and Senators about issues important to the industry."

Horse owners, breeders, veterinarians, trainers, competitors, recreational riders, shows, stables and others who desire to be involved in grassroots efforts in Washington are encouraged to join the Congressional Cavalry Program.

"We are hoping to include individuals from as many AHC member organizations as possible to get a cross-section of the horse industry identified in each district to represent themselves, their organization and the horse industry when called upon," said Hickey.

Member organizations already signed onto the Congressional Cavalry include the American Association of Equine Practitioners, the American Paint Horse Association, the American Quarter Horse Association, the Thoroughbred Owners and Breeders Association, the U.S. Equestrian Federation and the U.S. Trotting Association.

Individuals will be mobilized when there is a need for grassroots lobbying. The AHC will provide participants with whatever information is necessary.

"Other Congressional Cavalry activities may include visits with Members of Congress in Washington or back in their home district and invitations to Members of Congress to visit your facility, event or activity," according to Hickey.

Please contact the equine association you are a member of or join the American Horse Council to become a part of this exciting initiative.

I am an attorney with the Suffolk County Legal Aid Society. I represent children in Family Court in Riverhead.

Through my work I became acquainted with Barbara Hubbard. Barbara is a Certified Social Worker and has been a great help to me, in my representation of some children who happen to be her patients as well. Through our conversations I learned that Barbara is the owner of Grace River Farms in Riverhead, and also is certified by the North American Riding for the Handicapped Association.

While I have learned that horses are great companions and that many people, including my wife and son love riding, I did not know how helpful horses can be in assisting people with their disabilities.

Barbara treats children who are her patients with Therapeutic Riding activities. These activities contribute to the cognitive, physical, emotional and social well being of people with disabilities. She has seen marked improvements in children suffering from autism, who have difficulty responding to verbal directions and become easily distracted, but respond well to the structured setting of contact with horses and riding. The structure helps the autistic child develop social and behavioral skills.

Barbara also provides her patients with Equine Assisted Psychotherapy. Equine Assisted Psychotherapy (EAP) is a collaborative effort between a licensed therapist and a horse professional.

Participants learn about themselves and others by participating in activities with the horses, and then processing (or discussing) feelings, behaviors and patterns.

The focus of EAP is not riding or horsemanship. In fact 90% of EAP takes place on the ground. EAP involves setting up activities involving horses which will require the individual, or group to apply certain skills such as: non-verbal communications, assertiveness, creative thinking and problem solving, leadership, work ethic, taking responsibility, teamwork and relationships.

EAP can be useful in addressing common mental health concerns, such as behavioral issues, attention deficit disorder, substance abuse, eating disorders, abuse issues, depression, anxiety and communication needs.

Barbara believes that barn is a clinical setting can be a "fresh start" for people in their treatment and recovery who are accustomed to more traditional clinical settings.

Barbara's work is just another example of the primacy of the connection between people and horses, and how interaction with horses can provide individuals with a more happy and full life.

Barbara Hubbard can be reached at Grace River Farms, 391 Middle Road, Riverhead, New York 11901, Tel. No. 631-433-4009.
